Moondog Digital and Double Century Software Merge Into Single Media Conversion Service and Software Company

Indianapolis, IN – September 4, 2008 – Moondog Digital and Double Century Software have merged to provide both media conversion software and services. Uniting the two sister companies will allow a single brand and shared opportunities.

“The growth of each individual organization will now combine to create new cross-market synergies,” said Craig Kelker, President of Moondog Digital. “Running each group individually since 2004 allowed for each group to serve different markets. As each company expanded services and offerings, the lines started to blur.”

Double Century’s hands-free CD ripping and DVD Processing product, RoboStation, will be rebranded under the Moondog Digital name. New partnerships with companies like Crestron Electronics, Kaleidescape, and Russound have fallen under the Moondog Digital brand. The merger of back office systems, long-standing partnerships, and other collateral will continue throughout calendar year 2008.

Kelker continued, “As the media conversion industry has matured, we want to leverage the expertise and abilities of both our technical staff and our seasoned conversion processes and programs. This merger is another step solidifying Moondog Digital’s place as an industry leader.”
